He regularly represents corporations, executives, business owners, and high-profile individuals in civil, criminal, commercial, and administrative disputes before Indonesian courts, regulatory bodies, and law enforcement authorities.

His experience includes handling high-value disputes involving state-owned enterprises, commercial and land disputes, regulatory investigations, corruption-related proceedings, as well as court-supervised restructuring, creditor negotiations, asset recovery, and enforcement matters before the Commercial Court and other judicial forums across Indonesia.

Before entering private practice, Phalosa gained valuable experience within the Indonesian judiciary at the Denpasar District Court, where he was involved in civil case administration, execution proceedings, and judicial coordination. This background enables him to deliver strategic, commercially focused, and effective representation in complex, high-pressure disputes.
